About the North Carolina Literary and Historical Association

On September 18, 1900, a group of men met in Raleigh to establish an organization to encourage literary and historical activity in North Carolina. The North Carolina Literary and Historical Association was founded and its purposes were "to stimulate the production of literature in our state," and "to collect and preserve historical material." The Literary and Historical Association facilitated the founding of the agency that would later become the Office of Archives and History. Illustrious North Carolinians have led the organization through the years, including Justice Walter Clark; R.D.W. Connor, first archivist of the United States; and authors Paul Green and Inglis Fletcher.

About the Federation of North Carolina Historical Societies

In 1975 the Federation of North Carolina Historical Societies was formed to assist historical organizations in promoting and preserving local history. Any group dedicated to pursuing historical activities is encouraged to join. Federation members receive a quarterly bulletin containing information of interest. They are also notified about workshops that may assist in their work. The Federation operates a no-interest loan program to assist in publishing historical materials or conducting special programs.

Suffrage Centennial Program Ideas

Department of Natural & Cultural Resources staff members involved with planning "She Changed the World," the 100th anniversary commemoration of the 19th Amendment, will present programming ideas that local communities can replicate. Contributions and resources from partner organizations can provide greater diversity and richer learning experiences for this statewide initiative. Examples include programs for school-aged children, community organizers, and fitness enthusiasts. This roundtable session will also include time for audience questions and discussion.

All afternoon programs are open to the public free of charge. Evening program open to all who register.
