Researching the History of Your House

1. Determine what information (if anything) has previously been collected about your house.
2. Conduct research with real estate records, deeds, city directories, and Sanborn maps.
3. Determine what the building itself tells you about its period of construction, later alterations, etc. through architectural analysis.

First Step:

Determine what information (if anything) has previously been collected about your house.

- ✓ Has it previously been surveyed, photographed, or researched in the past? Is there a file for the house (or its neighborhood) at the State Historic Preservation Office?
- ✓ Is it listed in the National Register of Historic Places, or in a National Register historic district?
- ✓ Is it a locally designated landmark, or within a locally designated historic district?
- ✓ Is it included in an architectural survey publication?

The National Register of Historic Places is the nation's official list of buildings, structures, objects, sites, and districts worthy of preservation for their significance in American history, architecture, archaeology, and culture. Though the National Register is a federal program, nominations are submitted by the states through state historic preservation offices.

The North Carolina State Historic Preservation Office has developed the following information sheets to describe the National Register of Historic Places, the meaning and advantages of listing in the Register, and the procedures for nominating properties to the Register.

North Carolina State Historic Preservation Office Website Search Tool (Including Global Searches of National Register Nominations)

Note: For quicker access you can save this html file to your desktop or folder of choice and click to open directly with your default browser.

Use this search tool to find keywords globally across all documents posted on the NC HPO website, including PDFs of most National Register nominations and architectural survey reports. You also may limit your search to National Register nominations or survey reports only. This is especially useful for searching for comparable examples for contexts, other works by the same architect, places related to specific individuals or themes, etc.

Enter a keyword or string of words and click Site Search. A page will open with a list of links to PDFs and other documents containing the word(s). Use your Back button to return to this page.

Hauser	x	Site Search
<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	Search NR nominations only
<input type="checkbox"/>	Search survey reports only
<input type="checkbox"/>	Search the entire HPO site

Select one or the other of the boxes. Selecting two will search the lower box checked. Selecting none will search the entire web.

Limitations: Many PDFs of older nominations were scanned from poor quality photocopies (the originals are with NPS), and optical character recognition may not work perfectly in those nominations, so there is no guarantee you'll find everything. But you can find a lot. Recently posted nominations and reports may not yet have been discovered by Google, but you can search them one at a time with your PDF reader, opening them from <http://www.hpo.ncdcr.gov/NR-PDFs.html> and <http://www.hpo.ncdcr.gov/surveyreports.html>.

Search Tips:

If you search on a string of words, placing them within quotes will limit the results to that specific string. Thus "Frank Pierce Milburn" will find only those documents where the architect's name is written in full. Searching simply on Frank Pierce Milburn (without quotes) will find those documents that have all three words in any order or sequence anywhere in the document. Searching on Milburn alone will find Frank Milburn, Frank P. Milburn, F.P. Milburn, Milburn & Heister, etc. -- and of course "George Milburn" and every other occurrence of Milburn -- but you'll be surer of finding every possible instance of Frank.

If your keyword is likely to appear often as a string within longer words, type the word in quotes with a space before the first letter. Thus " arbor" will find arbor but not harbor or Scarborough.

To indicate a word to exclude from results, include it in the search with a minus sign in front. Thus searching on Georgian -Revival will exclude documents with the string "Georgian Revival" but otherwise keep all with "Georgian". But it will also exclude those nominations that use the word "revival" in some other context elsewhere in the document.

More tips for Google searches may be found here and here.

60. Winston-Allen House
104 Sunset Ave.: 1897

This two story, three-bay-by-two-bay, frame Victorian house with projecting center bay was built between 1896 and 1897 for John P. Winston, local hardware merchant. It is not known if John Winston ever occupied the house because he sold it to Emma C. Allen (1852-1934) in November of 1897. Emma Allen, the widow of Franklin County farmer, Burrows Allen, moved with her three children, Daisy, Gilmer, and Ruth, to this house shortly after her husband's death. Mrs. Allen rented rooms to professors at Louisburg College until her death in 1934. Her daughter, Ruth Allen (1892-1955), continued to live here with Lucy King, the current owner, until Miss Allen's death. Daisy (Allen) Brinkley (1881-1972), the widow of L.L. Brinkley, returned to Louisburg in 1952 and lived in her childhood home until her death. Lucy King, a long time friend of the Allen family, inherited the property and continues to live here.

Exterior features of the house include chamfered, two-story cornerposts, molded eaves which return in the gable ends, and a four-light transom above the two-leaf Victorian door. The multi-bay front porch has projecting bays and a characteristic spindlework frieze and balustrade with chamfered columns and decorative brackets. Two-over-two sash windows with one-part flat surrounds, and two corbeled cap interior brick chimneys complete exterior features. The Winston-Allen house was originally a two-story, single pile I-house with a one story rear wing. Emma Allen modified the house between 1908 and 1914 by adding the projecting center bay and replacing the one-story wing with a two-story wing. The central hall plan interior has been compromised by the use of modern material such as wood paneling and acoustical tile ceilings, however, the modest Victorian mantels, beaded tongue and groove wainscoting in the central hall and four panel doors are still intact.

This two-story, gable front, frame structure was built in 1879 as a house of worship by the Baptist congregation of Louisburg. C. Augustus Jenkins, pastor 1879-1883, was the in 1951 with Colonial Revival-style details, aluminum siding, and several additions, the interior of the main block is more intact. Unlike most surviving houses of the same vintage, which generally follow the hall-parlor plan, the Oaks has a center-passage plan, with the passage flanked by one large room on one side and two smaller rooms on the other. These rooms retain original paneled mantelpieces with molded shelves and arched fireplaces. The two smaller rooms share a single chimney with corner fireplaces. Paneled wainscoting and several six-panel doors with three-part molded surrounds have also been preserved. Portions of original beaded wall sheathing survive. A corner stair in the hall leads to the upper story, which also displays original woodwork.

The stone-walled family cemetery lies to the west of the house and contains the graves of David Hinton and his family, as well as a marble plaque bearing the family crest. To the northeast are two tobacco-curing barns and a two-room tenant dwelling.

House-Nichols House

[WA 1979] S.R. 2512, Knightdale vicinity

House-Nichols House

The House-Nichols House is a fine example of the most popular of Wake County house types, the one-story triple-A-roofed dwelling. One of several similar early twentieth-century houses on what were originally adjoining House family farms, the House-Nichols House displays simple Victorian details, such as turned porch supports with sawn spandrels and decorative gable vents. To the rear are an ell and a slightly older two-room house, now attached to the ell by a breezeway, that later served as a kitchen and dining room. The house is said to have been built by Wesley House but was acquired by Otis Nichols in 1940. The Nichols family grew corn, cotton, and as much as 6 acres of tobacco on their farm. A frame packhouse and curing barn still stand behind the house.

Main-House, Midway Plantation

The best preserved of the three surviving Hinton family plantation seats in eastern Wake County, Midway was constructed in 1848 by Charles Lewis Hinton as a wedding gift to his son, Major David Hinton, and his wife, Mary Bodie Carr. The house was named Midway for its location halfway between the two other survivors, Beaver Dam and the Oaks.

The handsome Greek Revival main house stands two stories tall with a low-pitched hip roof. At either end are single interior chimneys. A one-story porch supported by four fluted Doric columns shelters the main entrance, which is flanked by sidelights and topped by a transom. These columns recently replaced the deteriorated originals. The porch is topped by a balustrade surrounding the second-story balcony. The window trim, paneled cornerboards, and cornice typify vernacular Greek Revival design. A one-story wing, said to be contemporary with the main block, is attached to the east end. Also contemporary is the one-story section across the rear, to which several later rooms have been added.

The first floor of the main section of the house features a center hall flanked by two rooms on either side. The front rooms are larger than those at the rear. The stair ascends in a long straight flight from the rear of the hall to two upper-story rooms. All rooms display simple Greek Revival trim. The deep moldings of the door and window cases are set off by simple unadorned cornerblocks. Especially noteworthy are the mantels, several versions of the same design with molded shelves resting on heavy engaged Doric pilasters.

An important complex of early dependencies still stands near the main house. The carriage house and kitchen may predate the main house. Also surviving are the plantation schoolhouse, which has been remodeled as a dwelling, the plantation office, and the tiny picturesque playhouse. The whole plantation complex is set in a grove of immense oak trees. (NR)

Wrought Nailmaking

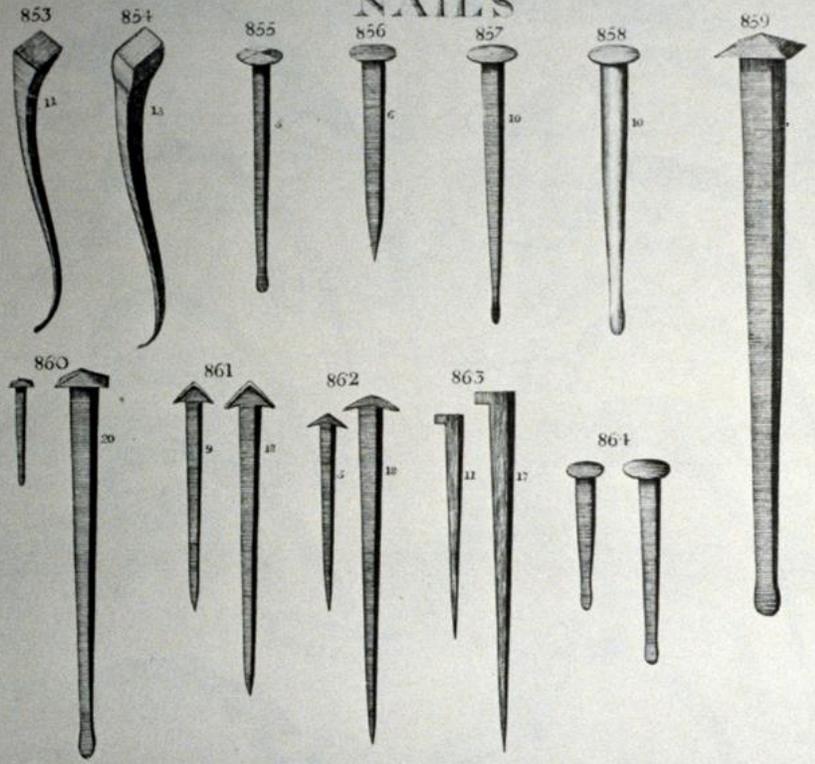

Lacking in beauty, the "nail header" is hardly a collector's prize, yet its plainness does not adequately explain its infrequent appearance in antique shops. Considering how farmers made nails by the thousands during winter months around the forge or fireplace, the rarity of headers is a mystery.

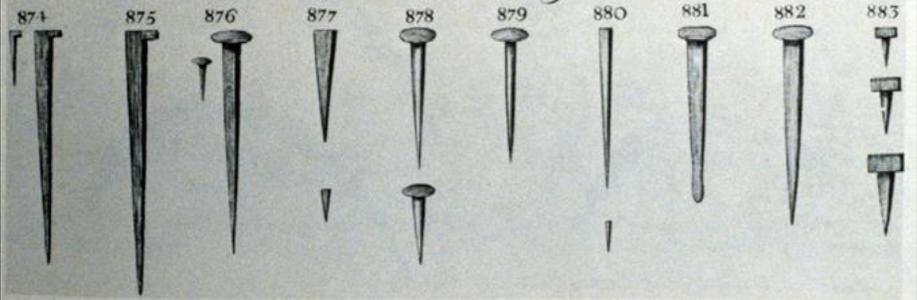

Machine-cut nails taper only on two sides; wrought nails on four. The most common "rose nail" had four hammer hits (if done by an expert); the head of the "clasp nail" had sharp downward sides to cut into the surface; "plancher nails" had T-shaped heads to hold down flooring; the "scupper" nailed leather (as for a bellows). Though our "brad" is a small-headed nail, the word once meant "broad" and the "brad" was such a nail for planks.

Nail plate was made in rolling mills, thus cut nails were of uniform thickness, depending on nail size. Thin nail plate (i.e., small nails) was usually hand-held while feeding into shear. Thicker nail plate (i.e., larger nails) offered more resistance to shearing - was usually heated and held with tongs while feeding into shear. To compensate for tapered shank, nail plate had to be alternately wiggled or ped, see Figures 3 and 4.

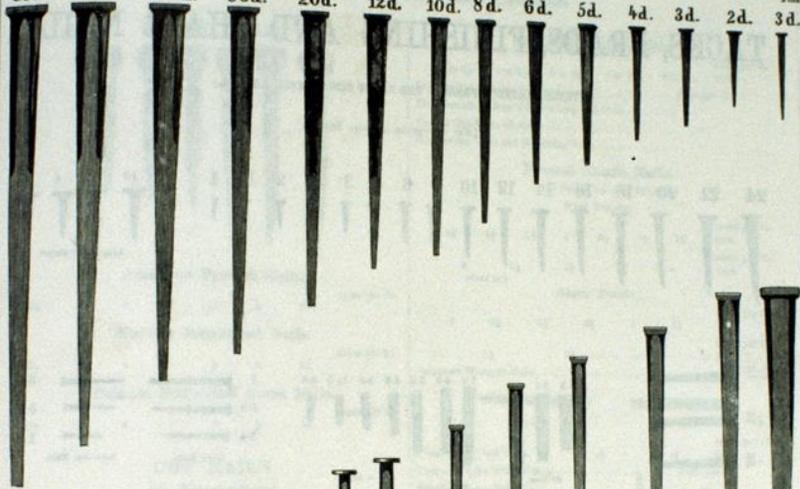

After cutting, the nails were headed by: (a) hand, after heating them and using a heading tool similar to that used for wrought nails, see Figure 1. This was the earliest method, and was used for

Understanding Old Buildings: The Process of Architectural Investigation

Heritage Preservation Services

If you have ever felt a sense of excitement and mystery going inside an old building—whether occupied or vacant—it is probably because its materials and features resonate with the spirit of past people and events. Yet excitement about the unknown is heightened when a historic structure is examined architecturally, and its evolution over time emerges with increasing clarity to reveal the lives of its occupants. Architectural investigation is the critical first step in planning an appropriate treatment—understanding how a building has changed over time and assessing levels of deterioration.

Whether as a home owner making sympathetic repairs, a craftsman or contractor replacing damaged or missing features, or a conservator reconstituting wood or restoring decorative finishes, some type of investigative skill was used to recognize and solve an architectural question or explain a difficult aspect of the work itself.

To date, very little has been written for the layman on the subject of architectural investigation. This Preservation Brief thus addresses the often complex investigative process in broad, easy-to-understand terminology. The logical sequence of planning, investigation and analysis presented in this Brief is applicable to all buildings, geographic locations, periods, and construction types. It is neither a “how to” nor an exhaustive study on techniques or methodologies; rather, it serves to underscore the need for meticulous planning prior to work on our irreplaceable cultural resources.

Determining the Purpose of Investigation

Both the purpose and scope of investigation need to be determined before formulating a particular approach. For example, investigation strictly for research purposes could produce information for an architectural survey or for an historic designation application at the local, state or national level.

Within the framework of The Secretary of the Interior's Standards for the Treatment of Historic Properties, investigation is crucial for “identifying, retaining, and preserving the form and detailing of those architectural materials and features that are important in defining the historic character” of a property, whether for repair or replacement. A rehabilitation project, for instance, might require an investigation to determine the historic configuration of interior spaces prior to partitioning a room to meet a compatible new use. Investigation for preservation work can entail more detailed information about an entire building, such as determining the physical sequence of construction to aid in interpretation. Investigation for a restoration project must be even more comprehensive in order to re-capture the exact form, features, finishes, and detailing of every component of the building.

Whether investigation will be undertaken by professionals—architects, conservators, historians—or by interested homeowners, the process is essentially comprised of a preliminary four-step procedure: historical research, documentation, inventory, and stabilization.

Historical Research. Primary historical research of an old building generally encompasses written, visual and oral resources that can provide valuable site-specific information. Written resources usually include letters, legal transactions, account books, insurance policies, institutional papers, and diaries. Visual resources consist of drawings, maps, plats, paintings and photographs. Oral resources are people’s remembrances of the past. Secondary resources, comprised of research or history already compiled and written about a subject, are also important for providing a broad contextual setting for a project.

Historical research should be conducted well in advance of physical investigation. This allows time for important written, visual, and oral information to be located, transcribed, organized, studied and used for planning the actual work.

A thorough scholarly study of a building’s history provides a responsible framework for the physical investigation; in fact, the importance of the link between written historical research and structural investigation cannot be overestimated. For example, the historical research of a building through deed records may merely determine the sequence of owners. This, in turn, aids the investigation of the building by establishing a chronology and identifying the changes each occupant made to the building. A letter
